

A sharply humorous, fast-paced debut novel about the effectsâ€”some predictable, some wildly unexpectedâ€”that an encounter at gunpoint can have on the life of a (previously) assured young woman. The gun in question is pointed at twenty-one-year-old Ellis as she walks through a New York City park. In the end she is unrobbed and physically unharmed. But she is left psychologically reeling. Over the next few weeks Ellis keeps everyone at bay: the police, the men who want to save her (â€œthe ROTC boyâ€• poet and â€œthe red-faced representative of the worldâ€•), and the university therapist who hints that her sweaters may be too tight. But when Ellis accompanies her mother, a nurse, on a mission to the Philippines, she finds that lifeâ€”even if held upâ€”cannot be held back, and neither, finally, can she.
